

Jennifer Yohe, SVP and Chief Procurement Officer, Optimum

Jennifer Yohe is Senior Vice President and Chief Procurement Officer at Altice USA. In this role, she oversees the company's strategy and execution of procurement, supply chain, and other strategic relationships and partnerships while also leading inventory management and corporate administrative functions, including real estate. This includes oversight of the company's governance process related to vendor identification, evaluation, selection, and relationship management to demand vendor and BPO quality and excellence.

Jennifer has more than 25 years of experience in the cable operator industry managing large and small deals for major cable and technology companies. She has held senior procurement and operations roles at Comcast and Time Warner Cable (now Spectrum), and also served as Chief Operations Officer at DZS, a provider of fiber access and optical telecommunications networking, leading all operations activities including supply chain, procurement, manufacturing, commercial management, and demand planning.

Her exceptional negotiation skills have led to savings of more than $1 billion for the operators that have employed her. The results she has produced throughout her career have resulted in several notable recognitions, including being named by Cablefax to the Most Powerful Women in Cable and Top Women in Technology lists 11 times. She was recently honored by Cable TV Pioneers as part of its Class of 2024.

Jennifer is a passionate community advocate on a personal and professional level, leading supplier diversity efforts at Optimum while also advocating for DE&I in the business by supporting HER Impact Network, Optimum's employee resource group that promotes gender diversity and representation. She has also held many roles for The WICT Network and Big Brothers Big Sisters.

She is a graduate of the University of Pittsburgh.
